

22 August 2014 - "I deeply regret that, given the onset of so many other armed conflicts in this period of global destabilization, the fighting in Syria and its dreadful impact on millions of civilians has dropped off the international radar," the High Commissioner for Human Rights Navi Pillay announced today.

191,369 cases of individuals have been killed in Syria between March 2011 and the end of April 2014, according to an updated analysis carried out by data specialists on behalf of the UN Human Rights Office.

"With additional killings reported from earlier periods, in addition to the new killings that have taken place, the total is more than double the number documented a year ago. Nevertheless, as the report explains, tragically it is probably an underestimate of the real total number of people killed during the first three years of this murderous conflict," Pillay said.

Accountability analysis