

5 September 2014 – In the three years after the fall of Muammar Gaddafi, Libya has been in a state of civil war. As the conflict rages, serious violations of international human rights and humanitarian law are taking place in the Libyan cities of Tripoli and Benghazi according a recent UN report

These violations herald dire consequences for civilians and civilian infrastructure in the country. Casualties including women, children and foreign nationals are endemic as abuses such as indiscriminate shelling and attacks on civilian objects, the shelling of hospitals, the abduction of civilians, torture and unlawful killings take place.
