13 October 2014. More than 6000 people gathered at City Hall Square in Copenhagen last week in what organizers say was probably the world's largest food waste event.

Thursday October 9, two Danish Ministers opened Denmark's largest event against food waste – United Against Food Waste.

The event was initiated by the consumer movement, Stop Wasting Food movement Denmark, in cooperation with the Danish Ministry of the Environment. The event took place in a lovely autumn weather – and representatives from the entire food chain served delicious surplus food for an enthusiastic audience.

Danish minister for the environment, Kirsten Brosbøl, and minister for food, Dan Jørgensen, opened the event together with Mayor of Copenhagen Frank Jensen, UNEP-director John M. Christensen and secretary General of WWF, Gitte Seeberg.
