

6 December

In 1960 there were an estimated one million chimpanzees living in Africa when Jane Goodall ventured into, what is now, the Tanzanian jungle. Today, that number has dropped by almost 700,000. Chimpanzees face multiple threats from illegal poaching, habitat destruction and diseases, predominantly brought about by human activities. In response to these threats, Dr Jane Goodall founded ten offices in Europe dedicated to raising awareness and funding for activities conducted by her institutes out in Africa. Providing research on chimpanzees and conservation initiatives to preserve their habitats, the Jane Goodall Institute Belgium was founded in 2005 and continues to promote the protection of the environment and animals.

For more information on the event, please visit here. And if you are unable to attend, please contact us at cin@cinemagalleries.be or 02 201 20 10.